

Before You Begin . . .

Your buddy/brother has just taken the plunge – he’s found the love of his life and proposed. Now he is up to his neck in china patterns, color swatches, Chicken Marsala, and checklists. He has entered a world that is foreign and, frankly, a bit scary. However, there is a silver lining – YOU!

Yes, you, the best friend, the best bud, the Best Man. Contrary to popular belief, your job is not to find the most expensive stripper and drink the most beer. Sorry! You have actually been entrusted with very important duties as the Groom’s right-hand man.

Yes, you will still have fun – really! Take pride in the fact that the Groom trusts you with such an honor. So here’s your chance to help your friend through the maze of wedding craziness and, if you follow the suggestions in this Guide, you just might make the Bride fall in love with you, too!

The Duties of the Best Man

In days of old, the Best Man was there to fight any other man who may come to claim the Bride. But because that doesn’t usually happen these days, you get to help the Groom with the following:

Items marked with *: If you are lucky, the Bride and Groom have hired a wedding planner. These are things that he/she typically takes care of. This is why the Best Man loves wedding planners! However, before you assume that anything has been taken care of, confirm it with the Bride. It's guaranteed she will be impressed that you asked and, most likely, the Groom may not know the details.
